About Adam

Adam Dean is the Program Director for The First Tee of Tri-Cities. With 17 years experience and over 4,000 private lessons given, he has helped hundreds of students improve their game with a simple approach.

A nine-time PGA award winner in the area of coaching, his goal is to keep instruction focused on the fundamentals of the golf swing.

What's Really Important?

There are not many universal truths in golf, but most highly skilled players display similar traits in their setup, rotation, club path, and impact position.

Effective teaching simplifies the process for the student and allows the player to fill in their own swing preferences without compromising fundamentals.

What To Expect

Private Lessons alone will not make you a better golfer. You will benefit most from the practice time that you invest between sessions. A good lesson will give you the tools that you need to improve the way you practice.

How Does This Work?

A good way to think of private lessons is to imagine building a house. You start with the foundation and work up. In golf terms this means one building block (fundamental) at a time. The goal is to master each building block, turning the desired movement into a natural motion with time and repetition.

What Kind of Lesson is Best?

The best lesson for you depends on your goals and skill level. There are two main practice types: Repetitious and Random. These are available at the range, practice green, on the course, or in the simulator. Video is included with each lesson.
